

Problem 2006

Facts:

1. In May 2005, after three years of war and nine years of occupation by the nation of Qurac, the South East Asian country of Razachstan held democratic elections. During the occupation, Quraci forces committed brutal acts against the Razachstani people, especially members of the Marijani caste. Razachstan is a country whose entire social infrastructure is embedded in a caste system, in which the Marijani are considered the "lowest of the low". Prior to the occupation there were at least 500,000 violent crimes committed against Marijanis annually; during the Quraci occupation, that figure tripled.

2. While the Quraci occupation of Razachstan had been strongly condemned by the international community, no action was taken until February 2002 when the international community discovered 27 Fatari troops occupying a Marijani village. The villagers indicated that these Fatari soldiers had been occupying the village for over a year. Upon learning strongly discriminated against minority in Razachstan, it would be impossible for them to get justice in a Razachstani court and requested that the case remain under ICC jurisdiction.

12. Fearing the idea of being tried in a Razachstani court, representatives of the
